THE

INTRODUCTION.

THE Faculty of Speech, which makes ſo conſiderable a Difference between a Man and a Brute, is of excellent Uſe, as it renders Mankind converſable one with another, and as the various natural Endowments, Obſervations, Experiences, and Attainments of every individual Man, are hereby, with a wonderful Facility, mutually communicated. And we may add to this the Invention of Letters, by means of which we are not confined within the narrow Limits of our Acquaintance and Contemporaries, but one Man may be acquainted with the Attainments of Multitudes of the wiſeſt Men in Preſent and Ancient Times, either in his own or remote Countries. Words are thoſe Channels, by which the Knowledge of Things are conveyed to our Underſtandings: And therefore, upon a right Apprehenſion of them depends the Rectitude of our Notions; and in order to form our Judgments right, they muſt be underſtood in their proper Meaning, uſed in their true Senſe, either in Writing or Speaking: For, if the Words of the Speaker or Writer, though ever ſo appoſite to the Matter, be taken in a wrong Senſe, they form erroneous Ideas in the Mind concerning the Thing ſpoken or written of; and if we uſe Words in a falſe and improper Senſe, this cauſes Confuſion in the Underſtanding of the Hearer, and renders the Diſcourſe unintelligible.

It ought, therefore, to be the ſpecial Care and ſtudy of every one, who would have his Mind furniſhed with the uſeful Knowledge of Things of any kind, to get a true and diſtinct Idea of the proper Senſe and Meaning of Words, and Terms of Art, in which they are expreſſed, without which no good Progreſs can be made.

It has therefore been the univerſal Practice of all polite Nations, to make the Study of Letters the firſt Buſineſs of Life: And becauſe this Accompliſhment is neceſſary to all Perſons, and but few, comparatively ſpeaking, have the Advantage of a learned Education to any conſiderable Proficiency, Dictionaries have in all Languages been compiled, to which, as to Storehouſes, ſuch Perſons may have Recourſe, as often as any thing occurs in Converſation or Reading, with which they are unacquainted, or when they themſelves would ſpeak or write properly and intelligibly.

And as ſuch Helps have been thought uſeful in all civilized Nations, they appear more eminently neceſſary in the Engliſh Tongue, not only becauſe it is, perhaps, the moſt copious Language of any in Europe, but is likewiſe made up of ſo great a Variety of other Languages, both Ancient and Modern, as will plainly appear to any one who ſhall peruſe the following Dictionary. Of the Reaſon of which Mixture, and by what Accidents it was brought about, I ſhall give the following Account.

That Languages are liable to Changes and Alterations (beſides that ancient Confuſion of Tongues at the Building of the Tower of Babel) there have been too many Inſtances to require any Proof. The Cauſes of Change in Language are, in general, Three:

Firſt, Commigrations or Conqueſts of Nations, by which, in Tract of Time, there ſucceeds a Coalition of the Languages of the Conquerors with the Conquered. So the Italian Language ſprang from the Latin, being mixed with German-Gothic: The Spaniſh from Latin, German, and ancient Gauliſh or Moriſco: The French from the Latin, German, and ancient Gauliſh or Gallic.

Secondly, From Commerce, by which Offices, Dignities, the Names of Wares, and Terms of Traffick, are introduced, which we commonly take with the Wares from the Perſons of whom we have them, and new-form them according to the Genius of our own Tongue.

Thirdly, From the Eſteem and valuable Properties of any particular Language, by which we endeavour to imitate this or that Tongue, as the more Learned, Elegant, Copious, or Expreſſive. So learned Men all over Europe eſteem the Latin and Greek Tongues, as the Treaſuries of all Science; Chriſtian Divines reverence the Hebrew and Greek; the Turks and Mahometans the Arabick, as the Miſtreſs of Religion; the Dutch, Germans and Engliſh, the French, for its Softneſs and Smoothneſs of Expreſſion; the Danes and Swedes, the Teutonic, as more copious.

If a Tongue be once eſteemed more learned, from thence the Learned commonly borrow Technical Words, or Words of Art; as in Phyſick, Philoſophy, Mathematicks, and others, from the Greek. If it be eſteem'd more elegant or fine in Pronunciation, then Courtiers, who are apt to diſlike any thing that is common, and the Product of their own Country, and to delight in what is foreign, borrow a great many Words of Complaiſance and Addreſs.

Firſt, The ancient Language of Britain is generally allow'd to have been the ſame with the Gaulic or French (this Iſland, in all probability, having been firſt peopled from Gallia) as both Cæſar and Tacitus affirm, and prove, by many ſtrong and concluſive Arguments, as by their Religion, Manners, Cuſtoms, and the Nearneſs of their Situation. But now we have very ſmall Remains of the ancient Britiſh Tongue left in England, except in Wales and Cornwall; which will not appear ſtrange when what follows is conſidered.

Julius Cæſar, ſome Time before the Birth of our Saviour, in the Time of King Caſſivellane, made a Deſcent upon England, tho' he rather diſcover'd it than made a Conqueſt of it; but about the year of Chriſt 45, in the Time of Claudius, Aulus Plautius was ſent over with ſome Roman Forces, by whom, and P. Oſtorius Scapula, Codigunus, and Caractacus, two Kings of the Britons, were ſeverally overcome in a Battle. A Roman Colony was planted at Malden in Eſſex, and the Southern Parts thereof reduced to the Form of a Roman Province; and after that, the Whole was conquered, as far as the Friths of Dumbarton and Edinburgh, by Agricola, in the Time of Domitian; and the Remains of the unconquered Britons retired to the Weſt Part, called Wales, carrying their Language with them over the Mountains, where they have preſerv'd it to this Day.

Britain being thus become a Roman Province, tho' ſtill ſuffer'd to be governed by Kings of its own, as Vice-Roys under the Roman Emperors, the Roman Legions reſiding in Britain for the Space of above two hundred Years, undoubtedly diſſeminated the Latin Tongue; and the People being alſo governed by Laws written in Latin, muſt neceſſarily make a Mixture of Languages. This ſeems to have been the firſt Mutation the Language of Britain ſuffered: However, ſo tenacious were our Forefathers of their Native Language, that it over-grew the Roman.

Thus the Britiſh Tongue continued for ſome time mix'd with Provincial Latin, till the Roman Legions being call'd home, upon account of inteſtine Troubles, about the Year 433, the Scots and Picts, taking the Advantage of their Abſence, harraſs'd the Northern Parts of Britain; againſt whom King Vortigern, about the Year 440, call'd in the Aſſiſtance of the Saxons, a Great and Potent Nation among the Germans, in the Dukedom of Holſtein, but greater by the Aggregation of many People under their Name and Service, as the Jutes from Jutland, and the Angles from Sleſwick; who coming hither under the Conduct of Hengiſt and Horſa, having overcome the Picts and Scots in a pitch'd Battle, near Stamford in Lincolnſhire, were afterwards rewarded for this Victory with the Iſle of Thanet, and after that with the whole County of Kent, where they governed for about 350 Years, under the Titles of Earls of Kent; but they growing powerful, began afterwards to quarrel with their Landlords, whom by Degrees they diſpoſſeſs'd of all the Country on this Side the Severn, parcelling it out into ſeven Kingdoms, called the Saxon Heptarchy, deſtroying the Britiſh Tongue, then mix'd with the Provincial Latin, together with the Inhabitants, by a long and deſtructive War, the Remains of them being again oblig'd to retire with the Britiſh Tongue over the Mountains of Wales.

So the Britiſh Language being in a manner quite extinct in all other Parts of Britain, the Saxon Language became the Language of the Country, and ſo continued till near the Year 800, when the Danes infeſted England, and made Settlements in the North and Eaſt Parts of Britain, and at length, in about 200 Years, arriv'd at the ſole Government of it; but their Government laſting only about 26 Years, made not ſo conſiderable a Change in the Engliſh Saxon, as the next Revolution. Then about the Year 1067, William Duke of Normandy, commonly called William the Conqueror, came over to Britain; and, having vanquiſhed Harold the Daniſh King, made an entire Conqueſt of Britain: And as a Monument of their Conqueſt, the Normans endeavoured to yoke the Engliſh under their Tongue, as they had them under their Command, by compelling them to teach their Children in their Schools nothing but the French, by publiſhing their Laws in French, and by enforcing them moſt rigorouſly to plead and be impleaded in that Tongue, for the Space of about 350 Years: By which means the Language of Britain became a Dialect of the Engliſh Saxon, and Norman French, which now are the Ground-work or Fundamentals of the preſent Language of Great-Britain.

Having thus ſhewn how the ancient Britiſh Language was in a manner extirpated by the Romans, Danes, and Saxons, and ſucceeded by the Saxon, and after that, the Saxon blended with the Norman French. Before I proceed to account for the Alteration of the Engliſh Saxon, by the two other Cauſes, I ſhall mention ſomething relating to the Saxon Tongue, of a great Part of which the Normans deſpoil'd us, giving a worſe for a better. "Great, verily (ſays Camden) was the Glory of our Tongue "before the Norman Conqueſt, in this, that the Old Engliſh "could expreſs moſt aptly all the Conceptions of the Mind in "their own Tongue, without borrowing from any:" And of this gives the following Examples.

The Service of God, called Religion, they called Ean-ꝼaꞅꞇneꞅ, as the only Aſſurance and faſt Anchor-hold of our Souls Health.

The Gladſome Tidings of Salvation, which the Greeks call Εὐαγγέλιον, they called Ᵹoꝺꞅ-ꞅpel, i. e. God's Speech.

Our Saviour, in French Savieur, of Salvator, Lat. they called Al-hael, i. e. All-Health.

The Phariſees, Sunꝺeꞃ halᵹens, i. e. Religious Men, which had ſundered and ſeparated themſelves from the Men of the World.

The Scribes, Boc Men, i. e. Book-Men.

The Sacrament, Þaliᵹꝺom, i. e. Holy Judgment.

Fertility, Eoꞃðeꞅ Ƿele, i. e. the Wealth of the Earth.

The Judgment, Dome ꞅeꞇꞇle, i. e. the Settling of Doom.

A Parliament, Ƿiꞇꞇen moꞇ, i. e. an Aſſembly of Wiſe Men.

Conſcience, Inpiꞇ, i. e. that which they did inwardly wot or know certainly.

Alſo the Names they gave to their Months were ſignificant; as,

JANUARY [Ƿulꝼe Monað, Sax. i. e. Wolf-Month] becauſe in that Month the Wolves were moſt miſchievous to them, for that, through the Extremity of Cold and Snow, they could not find Beaſts ſufficient to ſatisfy their ravenous Appetites.

FEBRUARY [Spꞃouꞇ Kele, Sax. i. e. Cole-Wort or Spring-Wort] becauſe then Worts begin to ſprout.

MARCH [Lencꞇ Monað, Sax. i. e. the Lengthening Month] becauſe then the Days begin in Length to exceed the Nights.

APRIL [Ooꞅꞇeꞃ Monað, Sax.] becauſe their Eaſter generally fell in April.

MAY [Tꞃı mılcı, Sax. i. e. three Milkings] becauſe they then milk'd their Cattle three Times a Day.

JUNE [Meꝺe Monað, Sax. i. e. Meadow-Month] becauſe then their Cattle were turned out to feed in the Meadows.

JULY [Þey-Monað, Sax. i. e. Hay-Month] becauſe then they generally cut their Hay.

AUGUST [Aꞃn-Monað, Sax. i. e. Barn-Month] becauſe they then filled their Barns.

SEPTEMPER [Ᵹeꞃꞅꞇ-Monað, Sax. i. e. Griſt-Month] becauſe they carried their new Corn to the Mill.

OCTOBER [Ƿyn-Monað, Sax. i. e. Wine-Month] becauſe then Grapes were uſually preſs'd to make Wines.

NOVEMBER [Ƿynꝺe-Monað, Sax. i. e. Windy-Month] becauſe of the high Winds happening commonly in that Month.

DECEMBER [Ƿynꞇeꞃ-Monað, Sax. i. e. Winter-Month] becauſe of the Cold then growing intenſe, and afterwards, [Þæliᵹ-Monað, Sax. i. e. Holy-Month] on account of the Nativity of Chriſt.

I ſhall only add one Piece of Saxon Antiquity more, and ſo proceed, which is the Lord's Prayer in the Saxon Language, written about the Year of Chriſt 900, by Alfred Biſhop of Durham,

Vꞃen ꝼaꝺeꞃ ðic aꞃð ın Þeoꝼnaꞅ ꞅıc ᵹehalᵹuꝺ ðın noma

Amen.

By theſe Inſtances it does appear, that the Engliſh Saxon Language, of which the Normans deſpoiled us in great Part, had its Beauties, was ſignificant and emphatical, and preferable to what they impoſed upon us.

This may ſuffice for the Mutation of our Language upon the firſt Cauſe of it, which was Conqueſt: I now proceed to the other Two.

Secondly, As to Commerce, the Britains having been of a long Time a Trading Nation, as it generally happens, we have had many Words introduced by that Means; and beſides, Britain having been a conſiderable Time under Subjection to the See of Rome in Eccleſiaſtical Affairs, the Italians coming over hither to manage the Pope's Concerns, and others for Church Dignities, and many Britains going hence to Rome on account of Eccleſiaſtical Suits, Prieſthoods, Abbacies, and Biſhopricks, muſt unavoidably introduce ſome Italian Words among us.

Thirdly, As to the particular Properties of a Language, our Tongue has undergone no ſmall Mutation, or rather has received no ſmall Improvement upon that Account; for as to the Greek and Latin, the Learned have, together with the Arts and Sciences (now rendered very familiar among us) introduced abundance, nay almoſt all the Terms of Arts in the Mathematicks, Philoſophy, Phyſick, and Anatomy, with many others from them; and many more have we entertained from the Latin, French, &c. for the ſake of Neatneſs and Elegancy.

So that at this Day our Language, which 1800 Years ago was the ancient Britiſh or Welſh, is now a Mixture of Saxon, Teutonic, tonic, Dutch, Daniſh, Norman, and Modern French, imbelliſhed with the Greek and Latin.

Yet is not this, I think, any Diſparagement to the Engliſh Tongue as now ſpoke (for this Change is nothing but what all Languages have been liable to, and have undergone, and do interchangeably participate each with other, having likewiſe enfranchiſed many Words from the Latin and Greek, tho' perhaps not ſo many as we) but it rather makes to the Advantage of its Character; for tranſplanting Foreign Words into our Native Soil, and new forming them, we have ſo enrich'd it, that now it is become the moſt Copious and Significant Language in Europe, if not in the World.

Thus Camden ſaid of it in his Time, “That though he would not ſay the Engliſh Tongue was as ſacred as the Hebrew, or as learned as the Greek, yet that it was fluent as the Latin, as courteous as the Spaniſh, as courtlike as the French, and as amorous as the Italian; ſo that being beautified and enriched out of other Tongues, partly by enfranchiſing and indenizoning Foreign Words, partly by implanting new ones with artful Compoſition, our Tongue is as copious, pithy and ſignificative as any other in Europe.”

And Dr. Heylin ſays of it, “That whereas the Engliſh Tongue is a Compound of Latin, French, Dutch, &c. it rather adds to its Perfection, than detracts any thing from its Worth; ſince out of every Language we have culled the moſt ſignificant Words, and equally participate of what is excellent in them, their Imperfections being rejected: For it is neither ſo boiſterous as the Dutch, nor ſo effeminate as the French; yet as ſignificant as the Latin, and, in the happy Conjunction of two or more Words in one, little inferior to the Greek.”

If then the Engliſh Tongue, in the Opinion of theſe learned Authors, deſerved this Character in their Time, how much more now, having ſince received ſo conſiderable Improvements from ſo many celebrated Writers.

Having given this ſhort Account, by what Steps and Gradations the Engliſh Tongue is arrived to be what it now is, I ſhall proceed to give a brief Account of the Method I have taken in the following Work.

It is not my Deſign to depreciate the Labours of thoſe worthy Authors, whoſe Writing of this kind have ſaved me much Pains: I ſhall only ſay, as, facile eſt inventis addere, in peruſing the beſt Books of this kind extant, I have found in them both a Redundancy and Deficiency; the former of which I have omitted, to make room for the latter, having enriched this with ſeveral thouſand Engliſh Words and Phraſes in no Engliſh Dictonary before extant.

As for the Etymological Part, or thoſe Words from Foreign Languages, whence the Engliſh Words were derived, I think I am the firſt who has attempted it in Engliſh, except what Mr. Blunt has done in his Gloſſography, which is a very ſmall Part, and thoſe of a Latin Derivation chiefly, beſides a ſmall Extract of Dr. Skinner's Etymologicon.

However; I ſhall not enlarge at preſent upon the Uſefulneſs of that Part, ſuppoſing that ſuch Perſons who underſtand the Languages need no ſuch Information; and as to them which do not, the Etymological Part is ſeparated ſo diſtinctly from the reſt, being incloſed within Crotchets, that they may paſs it over without any manner of Trouble or Inconvenience.

In order to the more eaſy apprehending the Method I have taken, I ſhall give the following Account:

1. In thoſe Words of a Northern Derivation, I have generally given the Saxon Word firſt, from whence the Engliſh Word, in all Probability, was derived; and afterwards the Teutonic, Daniſh, and Low-Dutch, where I have found them in the ſame, or a cognate Signification.

2. In many Words, for which no Saxon Words are to be found, I have given the Teutonic, Low-Dutch, Daniſh, or others, where they are to be found of the ſame or a like Signification, though it is very probable they came to us immediately from the Saxon Tongue; but the Fewneſs of the Books we have now left in the Saxon Language does not furniſh us with them; and inaſmuch as it is certain, that the Engliſh Saxon is no other than a Dialect of the ancient Teutonic, it appears the more probable.

3. In Words derived from the Southern Languages, I have ſet down the French, and afterwards frequently the Italian and Spaniſh, if they have them in the ſame or a like Signification; and laſtly, the Latin, from which probably they were all derived.

4. In Terms of Art, as Anatomy, Chymiſtry, Logick, Mathematicks, Philoſophy, Phyſick, Surgery, and others, I have generally given the French, if they have them, then the Latin, and afterwards the Greek, from whence they generally proceeded.

5. In many Words of a Latin or Greek Original, not properly Terms of Art, I have likewiſe in the firſt Place ſet the French, afterwards the Latin and Greek, ſo far complying with thoſe who are of Opinion, that we have them immediately or in the firſt Place, from the French; though I cannot entirely give into that Notion, for Reaſons which will appear in ſome of the following Articles.

6. Thus much in the general: But more particularly as for thoſe Words which the French have very near in Spelling, and alſo the Latin, I have ſet down the French firſt, and after the Latin, from which they are derived.

7. In Nouns, eſpecially thoſe that end in ion, as Salvation, Generation, &c. which are evidently derived from the Latin, to avoid the Swelling of the Book, by ſetting down the Latin and French Words, I have put F. of L. at the End of the Paragraph, which ſignifies the Words, Generation, Salvation, &c. are as well French as Engliſh literally, which come of the Latin, Salvatio, Generatio, &c. and differ only by the Addition of n at the End.

8. In other Nouns, where the Engliſh Word is pure Latin, and the French differs in Spelling, in ſome Letter or Letters, as Author, L. Autheur, F. I have ſet the French within a Crotchet, and L. at the End, which denotes the Word to be literally Latin.

9. In many Adjectives in ive, as concluſive, &c. which are not found in Latin Dictionaries, though they might be analogically formed, as well as the Adverb concluſive, I have omitted to ſet L. at the End.

10. In Adjectives and Participles, I have omitted to ſet down the French, becauſe it appears plain to me, they were rather derived of the Latin than the French, as Deſolate, of Deſolatus, L. rather than Deſolé, F. This may ſuffice for the reſt.

11. As to Verbs, I have for the moſt part ſet down the Latin Supines, as the Words from which the Engliſh are immediately derived, rather than the Infinitive Moods, eſpecially thoſe of the third Conjugation in Latin, becauſe nearer in the Spelling, as to collect, from Collectum, Supine, rather than Colligere, Infinitive, for the Reaſon before-mentioned.

I have not confined myſelf to derive from thoſe Latin Words only, that may be found in Authors call'd Claſſick, or of the pureſt Ages of the Latin Tongue; ſince it is evident we have derived from many Latin Words, which have been handed down to us by Writers of a later Date, Schoolmen, Philoſophers, Phyſicians, Mathematicians, and others.

If any of thoſe Words, given as the Etymon of the Engliſh Word, ſhould be thought too remote in Senſe of Spelling, it may be ſufficient to obviate ſuch an Objection, that nothing is more common in the tranſplanting Words from one Language to another, than to make conſiderable Variations; as in the Word, Knave, from the Saxon Cnapa, which differs literally and in Senſe too; for it ſignified in Saxon Times no more than Servitour, but now generally is uſed to ſignify a diſhoneſt Perſon. And as to the Spelling, the different Orthography of Nations has ſo diſguiſed many Words of the ſame Pronunciation and Signification, that they appear ſo unlike, that ſuch as are not acquainted with each Language, nor accuſtomed to Etymological Obſervations, can hardly diſcern their Affinity: And beſides, very few of the Etymological Words are my own, but I have generally the Suffrage of Somner, Camden, Verſtegan, Spelman, Caſaubon, Dr. Th. Henſhaw, Skinner, Junius, Menagius, Minſhew, and other great Names, and approved Etymologiſts, to bear me out.

To conclude; I have omitted nothing to render this Work as compleat as all the Helps I could come at, and other Circumſtances would admit of. And I hope, that, conſidering the vaſt Variety both of Words and Things, as few Errors have eſcaped my Notice as could reaſonably be expected. If any diſſent from me in any Particular, it ought to ſecure me from Cenſure, that I pretend only to propoſe to, and not impoſe upon, their Judgment; and ſhall conclude with Horace,

Like Father, like Son.

This Proverb does not only intimate the Force of Nature, but alſo of Example; as much the Strength of Imagination and Practice in the latter, as the violent Bent of Inclination in the former. 'Tis true, that Children, though not always, are generally like the Father or Mother in their Minds, as well as their Bodies; the Faculties of the former commonly run in a Blood; and as for the Features and Complexions of the latter, they often look as if they were caſt in the ſame Mould. But I preſume the Point of the Proverb is chiefly directed at their Examples; and that ſuch as are the Parents, as to Vice or Virtue, ſuch are, too commonly, the Children; that the ill Examples of a vicious Fathe almoſt univerſally tend to the debauching Son; when the good Precepts and Example of a virtuous Father go a great way to th forming a virtuous one. Mali corvi malu ovum, ſay the Latins; and Οὐδέποτ' i σκίλλης, ῥόδα φύεται, ſay the Greeks.
